A little matter curiously illustrates the influence of the opening, up of the far east upon the nations of the west. Wooden nails, as everybody knows who has evir knocked a itea chest to pieces, or carefully examined any piece of Oriental joiner work, are in common use in China, Japan and Hindostan; and now, with the increasing inter course of the United States with the two former countries, the wooden and repairing done at all times to suit na'l is actually, to a certain extent, driving the common iron nail out of use. It seems remarkable, now that machinery has been so perfected as to pour out the metal fastenings in unlumited profusion, that this be the case but manufacturers in the Eistern States are said to be stoking up quite n trade to wooden nails with the Par west.
